Drafts

Updated: December 8, 2023.

A draft is a preliminary version of a written work, often written for comment, approval, or clearance by others. NLM selectively collects drafts of scientific articles that are either posted publicly to a preprint server prior to peer review or that have undergone peer review and been accepted for publication in a journal. A primary selection criterion is drafts developed with National Institutes of Health (NIH) support, maximizing the impact of the research. NLM makes such drafts discoverable via PubMed Central and PubMed.
